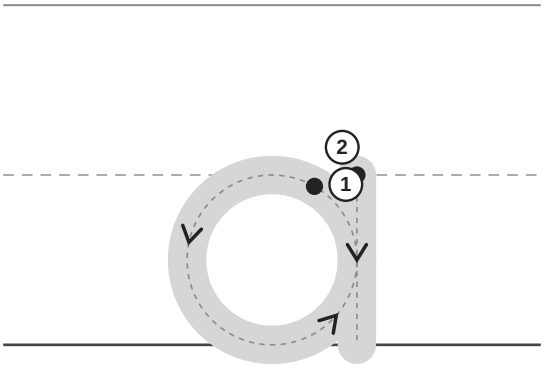
How to use this book



- Short and happy beats long and tired: 10 to 15 minutes a day is plenty.
- Use a pencil or a thin crayon. Hold it between the thumb and the first two fingers, a little above the tip.
- Always start at the dot and follow the numbered arrows. The order of the strokes matters as much as the shape.
- Each row gets a little harder: trace the solid letter, then the dotted ones, then the faint ones, then write on your own.
- Say the letter name and its sound out loud while writing, and point to the picture.
- Praise the effort, not just the result. Wobbly letters are how every writer starts.
